

Join Zamorano University as:

English Professor

Department of General Education

Join an institution that prepares leaders to transform the world

At Zamorano University, we believe education transforms lives, communities, and agrifood systems. For more than 80 years, we have prepared professionals with academic excellence, strong ethical values, and a commitment to the sustainable development of Latin America and beyond.

We are currently seeking an English Professor to join our academic team—an educator with a global outlook, a strong passion for teaching, and a commitment to experiential learning.

Your impact at Zamorano University

In this role, you will inspire and guide undergraduate students as they strengthen their English language proficiency within a multicultural environment. You will design and deliver innovative courses aligned with Zamorano University's Learning-by-Doing educational model, implement dynamic pedagogical strategies that strengthen students' communication skills, mentor students in academic projects and learning activities, and actively contribute to the development of the English program and university life.

Research, outreach, and global collaboration

This position also contributes to educational innovation and academic collaboration by promoting evidence-based English teaching practices, actively participating in continuous improvement processes within the English Program, integrating educational technologies into the teaching-learning process, and supporting institutional initiatives that advance internationalization and academic excellence.

What you will do

- Teach English courses aligned with your areas of expertise and according to the needs of Zamorano University's academic programs.
- Design, plan, and deliver English courses following the institutional curriculum.
- Develop course plans and lesson outlines, including instructional materials, study guides, and exercises.
- Prepare and update teaching materials and instructional resources aligned with course programs.

- Monitor student performance and implement activities to strengthen learning outcomes.
- Design student-centered learning strategies that support effective language acquisition.
- Conduct weekly assessments to objectively evaluate student progress and ensure the effectiveness of teaching methodologies.
- Provide timely feedback on student assignments and coursework.
- Advise and mentor students on research projects related to course topics.
- Develop instructional materials incorporating Information and Communication Technologies (ICT).
- Use digital teaching tools such as interactive boards, computers, and audiovisual equipment.
- Provide academic advising and tutoring to support student learning and performance.
- Hold office hours and provide individualized support to students when needed.
- Serve as a mentor in the First-Year Academic Mentorship Program.
- Prepare work plans for additional English courses beyond those currently taught.
- Participate in activities aimed at strengthening the English Program at Zamorano University.
- Update syllabi for assigned courses.
- Submit academic progress reports at designated points during each academic term.
- Prepare assessment cycle reports and recovery exam documentation.

Profile we are seekingRequired qualifications

- Master's degree in English or a related field, preferably in English teaching or applied linguistics.
- Minimum of five years of teaching experience.
- Excellent English language proficiency.

Preferred qualifications

- Experience teaching English in higher education.
- TESOL, TEFL, or equivalent certifications.
- Experience using educational technologies and digital learning resources.
- Previous participation in academic or institutional projects.
